WORKING CONDITIONS

Physical Demands

The incumbent is required to bend, lift, carry pull, push, stand for long periods of time, stretching and twisting during their working hours. Transferring patients in and out of bed, transferring to the hospital for activities, stripping/bed making, raising/lowering beds, moving of heavy equipment (beds, wheelchairs) and standing for long periods to deliver care. All of these activities the incumbent does in moderate for the length of the shift. The frequency of these activities makes up the majority of their work. These activities may lead to back, neck and extremity strain and injury.

The incumbent is required to work in limited and restrictive space, like the resident's washroom. This awkward bending or twisting may promote poor posture and can lead to injury.

Environmental Conditions

Exposure to sharps, prescribed medication, biohazardous and human waste.

Sensory Demands

Most senses must be utilized in observing, assessing, and treating residents. Being alert to the other residents while working with emergency situations is very demanding. Their assessment skills are vital to maintain human life.

Mental Demands

Establishing relationships with and providing care to residents who may be ill or disabled can be stressful, especially with the death or increased incapacitation of residents - daily - little control. Long-term care residents may be especially demanding of incumbents causing stress - daily - no control. Family members can be demanding and lacking understanding of the limits to care in a facility, causing stress for incumbents - occasionally - some control.

Dealing with aggressive, confused, physical/verbal abusive residents-daily, intoxicated visitors at times - daily - no control over exposure, some control over the outcome. For some residents a language barrier exists and trying to meet their requests and expectations can be stressful at times.

The LPN is expected to remain calm, controlled and professional regardless of the situation and demonstrate care and compassion to the resident, family and other members of the health care team.

High turnover rates and difficult in recruiting qualified staff leads to mental stress and fatigue. Constant disruption of their lifestyle caused by shift work schedules, overtime and on-call can create mental/emotional fatigue and disruption of sleep patterns.
