WORKING CONDITIONS

Working Conditions identify the unusual and unavoidable, externally imposed conditions under which the work must be performed and which create hardship for the incumbent. Express frequency and duration of occurrence of physical demands, environmental conditions, sensory demands and mental demands.

Physical Demands

There are many physical demands required of the incumbent such as, transferring clients in and out of bed, to wheelchairs and/or stretchers, transporting clients and equipment. Standing for long periods to document in the chart and deliver client care. The incumbent is required to work in a limited and restrictive space around their clients' bedsides, and other areas of the facility. This leads to awkward bending or twisting, promotion of poor coordination and can lead to injury. They are required to perform heavy lifting and restrain combative or confused clients.

The RN is unable to leave the premises during night shifts due to the limited RNs per shift and with the facility providing 24-hour emergency care. The incumbent carries out these activities in moderate to high intensity for the length of his/her shift (12 hours.)

Environmental Conditions

The Registered Nurse works in a hospital/clinic environment. The incumbent may be exposed to infectious diseases, biohazardous waste, body fluids, and sharps. The incumbent is also exposed, on a daily basis, to pharmacological agents that may be deleterious to health, including cytotoxic agents. The incumbent is also exposed to a busy work environment, including angry, screaming clients (children/adults) and noisy equipment. The incumbent is also at risk of injury from clients while assessing/providing treatment to intoxicated, mentally unstable, or emotionally distraught clients and their families. The incumbent is at risk of possible injury due to subduing and restraining clients in volatile situations.

Sensory Demands

Constant periods of high acuity demand long periods of concentration, accompanied by frequent interruptions and resulting in continually evaluating and shifting priorities. Most senses must be utilized in observing, assessing, and treating clients. Operating and monitoring medical equipment and troubleshooting require the concentrated use of multiple senses simultaneously. In an emergency situation, which happens quite frequently, the incumbent is required to be astute, responsive, and rapid in assessing and responding to the multiple needs of the client.

Mental Demands

The environment is dynamic and constantly changing, resulting in continually re-evaluating and shifting priorities. Many phone calls are placed to the physicians to review outpatients or to update physicians regarding inpatient conditions. Constant disruptions of a lifestyle, due to shift work schedules and overtime can create mental/emotional and physical fatigue and disruption of sleep patterns.

The incumbent is exposed on a daily basis to death/dying and other emotionally disturbing experiences. The Registered Nurse is expected to remain calm, controlled and professional, regardless of the situation and demonstrate care and compassion to the client, family, and other members of the health care team.

Incumbents are required to make medical/nursing judgements beyond the scope of their training, at times when medical/nursing resources are not readily available (i.e., defibrillating). Often the Registered Nurse is the first medical professional in contact with the clients when they come. They may be required to make split second decisions based on their skills and degree of assessment involved without any initial physician involvement.

High turnover rates and difficulty in recruiting qualified staff leads to mental anguish, stress and fatigue as a result of overtime.
